I have supervised Ph.D. theses on numerous topics, including: "Women and Child Labour in Western Kenya;" "Women, Class and Politics in Colonial Lesotho, 1930-1965;" "The 'Politics of Survival' and Peasant Politics in Twentieth-Century Malawi, 1891-1971;" the "History of the Marashea Gangs in South Africa, 1947-1999;" "Gender, Identity and Social Change among the Chewa, 1870-1945" and a PhD on human rights in Southwestern Nigeria. I co-supervised PhDs on "The Capricorn Africa Society in Northern Rhodesia/Zambia, 1949-1972, and "Women, Employment and Post-secondary Education in Nigeria." I have supervised numerous masters' theses and honours essays in international development studies, history and gender studies. I was graduate coordinator at the Institute of Gender and Development Studies at UWI where I supervised and was on the committees of a number of PhD, MPhil and MSc students, including my PhD student who graduated in 2013 with a thesis on empowerment and restorative justice in Trinidad. I co-supervised a PhD student at Stellenbosch University in South Africa, a PhD at the LSE, and an interdisciplinary PhD at Dalhousie University. All have graduated. I continue to supervise 5 PhD students and to be on 11 PhD committees in the PhD program on Global Governance and Human Security at the University of Massachusetts Boston. I am now also on PhD committees at the University of Ottawa (3 students) and Carleton University (1 student).
